Senater Harding's Programme for the American Farmer Is for Amerlean Institutions as Well.

In his speech of acceptance Senator his party to a problem which must the fundamental problem of the farm.

We are, none of us, of economic consequence except as we build with our national prosperity, our very national existence, hang upon the never ending flow to our mills and factories. terminals and ports, storehouses and markets, of the breadstuffs and live stock, the cotton and wool, the sugar and dairy food-all the farm products which have made this the greatest and richest country on earth.

Yet the difficulties of the farmers to get labor, to keep their sons at home, to find trustworthy agents to sell their wares, to reach the most favorable markets and to gain the maximum of reward for their hard labor and necessary service to the nation are as familiar to the average American as his A B Cs. This declaration of Senator Hamping Is true, and everybody knows it is true:

"In the rise of price levels there have come increased appraisals to his acres without adding to their value in fact, but which do add to his taxes and expenses without enhancing his returns. His helpers have yielded to the lure of shop and city until almost alone he has met and borne the burden of the only insistent attempts to force down prices.

"It challenges both the wisdom and the fustice of artificial drives on prices to recall that they were effective almost solely against his producis in the hands of the producer and never effective against the same products in passing to the consumer. Contemplating the defencelessness of the individual farmer to meet the organized buyers of his products and the distributers of the things the farmer buys, I hold the farmers should not only be permitted but encouraged to join in cooperative aswariation to rean the just measure of reward merited by their arduous
